PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Stay current with the rapidly evolving treatment landscape of chronic lymphocytic leukemia (CLL). This live, in-person CME activity will review evidence-based treatment approaches informed by the latest clinical trial data and practice guidelines, compare advantages and limitations of continuous and fixed-duration therapies, and explore factors that influence individualized treatment selection. Participants will also gain practical strategies to enhance shared decision-making (SDM), helping clinicians effectively communicate treatment options and partner with patients to develop personalized care plans that align with clinical needs, preferences, and goals.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Upon completion of this activity, participants should be able to:

- Discuss appropriate treatment options for patients with CLL based on evidence-based guidelines and clinical trial data
- Examine the pros and cons of continuous therapy and fixed-duration therapy for CLL
- Outline the value of SDM when developing a treatment plan for patients with CLL
- Implement SDM when discussing appropriate evidence-based treatment options for patients with CLL

TARGET AUDIENCE

This activity has been designed to address the educational needs of CLL specialists (academic medical center) and community-based oncologists, including hematologists/oncologists, who diagnose, treat, and manage patients with CLL.
